THE STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW JERSEY

RUTGERS

Campus at New Brunswick

A Caring Community

Livingston College is a small community of scholars where faculty, staff, and students care about each other. Our coeducational student body numbers about 3,500. Because Livingston students are allowed to consider any major offered at Rutgers' New Brunswick campus or to participate in designing an individualized major, the intellectual climate is diverse. The racial and ethnic background of our student body mirrors the population of New Jersey, adding yet another dimension to our community. Among the university's colleges, Livingston has a high percentage of students from outside New Jersey, making our environment truly cosmopolitan.

You will find that Livingston students follow the philosophy and example set by the faculty and staff, who encourage the development of a caring community. Our students eagerly seek opportunities to assist their fellow students through such activities as peer academic advising, advising in the residence halls, volunteering in student government, and participating in numerous student activities that provide opportunities to learn.

Wherever you look on campus, it is easy to see Livingston College in operation. One-to-one conversations or small group discussions among students, faculty, and staff are in progress — caring, sharing, being. This is Livingston College.

Personal Attention from Faculty

At Livingston College, you will be taught by members of an outstanding research faculty — the same faculty that teach all students on the New Brunswick campus of Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey. Livingston College creates the setting for close student and faculty interaction.

As you progress through the academic program, your professors may be nationally or internationally known scholars in the forefront of discovering new knowledge. In classes, independent study, or small group seminars, these professors will guide you as your world widens and your frontiers of knowledge expand.

At Livingston College, the professor who is your academic adviser will help you choose from among the more than 4,000 courses offered each semester and the nearly 100 majors available to Livingston students. This adviser will discuss your options and help you find your way through the system.

An Atmosphere for Growth

Livingston College gives personal attention to its students. We have an open-door policy and are always ready to help. Our staff includes both generalists and specialists who can help you deal with academic or personal concerns. Special help in reading, writing, and study skills; psychological, vocational, career, and financial aid counseling; and personal decision making are a few of the specialized programs available to you.

Livingston College expects students to learn to assume responsibility for their own lives. Consequently, you will make all kinds of decisions about time to devote to study, courses to take, summer job experiences, and life planning. Learning to be actively involved in your own education, you will come to know that our staff is concerned about your growth and development and seeks a genuine answer to our most frequently asked question, "How are you doing?"

As a Livingston student you can have the best of both worlds: Rutgers, a great university whose origins date from 1766; and Livingston, a small college that has a reputation for giving its students personal attention throughout their college career.

Livingston College is committed to a multidisciplinary program that brings together a diverse group of students, faculty, and staff in a cosmopolitan community dedicated to learning. Striving for excellence, we seek to prepare students for positions of leadership in the professions, business, and industry to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century.
